Areas of expertise: International cooperation, Multilateralism, Diplomacy, Governance and regulation

SCIENCES PO LILLE

Sciences Po Lille is one of France's leading institutions in the social sciences and humanities.

Its undergraduate and graduate programs provide a multidisciplinary education that combines political science, law, economics, history, sociology, and international relations with a strong emphasis on professional development.

The school prepares students for careers in public service, the private sector, and international affairs through a wide range of master's tracks and dual-degree programs. Its network of 230 partner universities worldwide expands opportunities for academic exchange, internships, and research.

Sciences Po Lille also offers a vibrant student life, with numerous student associations, conferences, cultural events, and sports activities, supported by an active alumni network. Located in the dynamic city of Lille—close to Brussels, Paris, and London—the campus provides excellent opportunities to explore France and Europe.

GENERAL OVERVIEW

The Multilateralism and Transnational Governance (MTG) master's program, taught entirely in English, provides a critical analysis of the current transformations in multilateralism and transnational governance. In the context of profound transformations in the international system, the MTG master's program aims to rethink the role of cooperation and multilateralism in defining the main orientations of the contemporary world. It is based on the following key elements:

- A sociological approach to international relations and the governance of international organizations (intergovernmental, regional, hybrid, etc.),
- A geographical approach taking into account both European issues and those of other continental or maritime areas,
- An approach focusing on issues of regulation and governance (digital, environment, health, migration, etc.).

The MTG master's program benefits from Lille's proximity to four major European capitals, headquarters of international organizations and global economic regulators: Brussels (EU, NATO); Paris (European Banking Authority, IMF European Office, OECD, World Organisation for Animal Health, UNESCO); London (International Maritime Organization, Commonwealth of Nations); The Hague (ICC, ICJ). Lille is also located in a region that is home to an EU agency (EU Railway Agency) and currently bidding to host the European Customs Agency.

MAIN CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

The Multilateralism and Transnational Governance (MTG) master's degree opens up a wide range of career opportunities, both in France and internationally, within public and private organizations involved in regional and global regulation and governance:

- International and regional organizations (UN, European Union, OECD, NATO, OSCE, World Bank, etc.) – analyst
- Public and diplomatic institutions (ministries, the diplomatic network, permanent representations, local authorities) – analyst, public affairs officer, etc.
- Non-governmental organizations and international associations (health, climate, migration, human rights, etc.) – expertise and advocacy, project management
- Companies and consulting firms – experts and analysts
- Think tanks, universities, and research centers: expertise and academic research

ADMISSION

Admission to the Master's program is open to students who have obtained at least 180 ECTS credits, or the equivalent, and who will have obtained 180 ECTS credits, or the equivalent, by the start of the academic year following the exam.

The admission process consists of three steps: a two-step online application (online registration followed by submission of a statement of purpose, résumé, transcripts of all university-level work, English language certificate for non-native English speakers, internship certificates if applicable, and an essay on a subject to be sent on March 5).

Eligible applicants will then be invited to an interview.
